

The Five Questions Card

Expose a rogue GLP-1 provider in about ninety seconds. Send these five questions to any telehealth provider or compounding pharmacy before you pay. A provider that dodges even one has answered you.

1

Which licensed pharmacy actually compounds this — and in what state?

You want a named, state-licensed 503A or 503B pharmacy, not “our partner network.” You can verify a real pharmacy’s license with that state’s Board of Pharmacy in minutes.

Red flag: vague “US-based partners,” no name, or a refusal to put it in writing.

2

What is the price at every dose, in writing?

GLP-1 doses escalate over months. Ask for the full price ladder — starting dose through maintenance — before you commit, so a mid-titration “dose tax” can’t surprise you.

Red flag: only the intro price is quoted; higher doses cost “more” with no number.

3

What am I charged if I don't proceed after the consult?

Some providers bill a consult or membership fee even if you’re not prescribed or you decline. Get the exact figure — and whether it’s refundable — before the visit.

Red flag: a “phantom” consult fee that only appears after you’ve entered card details.

4

What are your exact refund and cancellation terms?

Ask how to cancel, how far ahead of renewal, and what happens to medication already shipped. Have them point you to the clause in writing, not a summary.

Red flag: auto-renew locks, no cancellation window, or “all sales final” on a subscription.

5

Who do I contact at week three if I have a side effect?

Continuity of care is the difference between a pharmacy and a prescriber. You want a named channel — a clinician or care team you can actually reach — not just a support inbox.

Red flag: no clinical follow-up, or the only contact is a chatbot / generic help desk.

How to use it: Screenshot this card. Paste the five questions into your first message to any provider on your shortlist. Compare the answers side by side — the honest ones respond fast and in writing.
